Editorial

This is also a combined edition of the Journal for the year 2022. A total of four articles are featured in this Edition of the Journal. In the first paper Adeyemi and Adeyemi examines innovative information services delivery in polytechnic libraries in South-western Nigeria. The need for innovative information services delivery has become a necessity especially as the reality of the 'New Users' of information continue to dawn on us all. The next article by Boma Torukwein David-West investigated Emotional Intelligence and Attitude of Accounting Undergraduates towards Library Utilization at University of Port Harcourt. She reported that emotionally intelligent students recognize, manage and use their emotions to eliminate obstacles and advance their studies by having positive attitude towards effective utilization of library resources than students with low emotional intelligence. The Third paper delves into the awareness, knowledge and attitude of market women towards COVID-19 pandemic in Nigeria. In this study, Buraimo et al reported that majority of the sampled market women had low or poor knowledge of COVID-19 pandemic and related information. The market women surveyed also displayed moderate attitude towards prevention and control of COVID-19 amongst other findings. As accessibility to information technology(IT) facilities and its utilisation has been found to improve job performance of university faculty and researchers, Amuni and Tomori dug into the use of IT resources and access to it for job performance among faculty and research staff at Tai Solarin University of Education (TASUED), Nigeria. The study revealed a positive relationship between access to and use of IT resources by faculty and research staff, while gender was not an influencer of access to and use of IT resources.
